Future Week at Lund University 12–18 October 2020

A highly appreciated Future Week was held in October, and we are already looking forward to the next one! The theme for Future Week 2020 is Forces in Motion.

Which large and small forces have been set in motion – in society and in nature – and how can these affect our future? And what counterforces exist?

Topics covered could include forces of nature or the climate's tipping points, forces that are fighting to save the planet, for democracy and a better life, or strong forces that want something completely different.

Another focus issue could be the media and political forces that fight for power over world views, and what is true or not true. Demographic forces will inevitably affect the future, as will economic and technological trends.

Or other questions could be asked – What are the forces that will influence our future health and wellbeing? Where will people find sources of inner strength? What is the future role of religion?

In mid-January, we will release more information about, and an invitation to, a start-up meeting for Future Week 2020.

Merry Christmas and a happy new year
