Lund University launches an annual Future Week starting 14-20 October 2019 – Contributions welcome!

Lund University will again present its activities to students, staff and the public under a common theme. The science and culture weeks held in conjunction with the 350th anniversary were very successful and, based on that experience we are now organising Lund University's Future Week.

The week, which is to take place in October, will be an annual event in the University's public calendar. It will have a different theme each year. The theme for this year is Transitions, and we need your help to create the content!

Transitions

–Which do we have to make? Which do we want to make? And which would we rather avoid?

The theme covers research from all faculties. Transitions can be for the future, today, historical, potential, revolutionary or perhaps even invisible!

With the Future Week, we would like to provide the University with the opportunity to raise important and crucial issues. The event will be a popular science activity that will attract great interest from both within and outside academia. In order to succeed in this, we will need your input. We are looking for proposals on researchers and items for the week.

Please submit your suggestions for Future Week by 25 March at 15:00. Names of researchers and a description of the topic/idea should be emailed to Louise.Pierce@kommunikation.lu.se.

If you have any questions, please contact your faculty representative for LU Futura – Lund University's think tank on future issues: www.lu.se/lufutura. You are also welcome to contact the members of the steering committee.

Many thanks in advance!
